CITY COUNCIL

Unanimous vote 'a good step to help restore faith' in system

Zane Woodford Metro | Halifax

A consultant will soon conduct an in-depth review of the taxi industry in Halifax after a vote from regional council Tuesday night.

Council voted unanimously in favour of creating a request for proposals (RFP) for an industry review and jurisdictional scan including new industry technologies like audio and video recording, GPS-tracking, and smartphone applications; licence restrictions; sensitivity and safety training; passenger and driver safety measures like car shields and emergency alarm buttons; professional, moral and ethical standards for drivers; and conditions for automatic suspension of revocation of licences.

As part of the motion, council also voted to require taxi drivers to display their licensing decals in the front and back passenger area of their vehicles. They're currently allowed to be displayed anywhere in the vehicle. "I really think our taxi industry needs an overhaul, altogether," Coun. Tony Mancini said during debate.

Mancini said the industry in Halifax is lagging behind others in terms of safety and technology measures, and his daughter and her friends tell him they feel unsafe. "I think of late, the taxi industry has taken a bit of a hit PRwise," Coun. Lisa Blackburn said. "I think this is a good step to help restore faith in the system, which is badly needed."

The municipality's taxi licensing office will now begin to draft the RFP, which its supervisor, Kevin Hindle, said could take anywhere from a few days to a few weeks.

U.S. President fires FBI director James Comey. World

Norm Collins, a crosswalk advocate, has been setting up flags at crosswalks all over the city.

Flags here to stay

TRAFFIC SAFETY

But no new ones are coming for a while: Council

Zane Woodford Metro Halifax

Halifax won't be getting rid of any crosswalk flags yet, but there won't be any new ones installed for a while either.

Staff recommended removing the flags from crosswalks with pedestrian-activated lights - 56 of the 154 in the municipality - after a study of 50 crosswalks that found only eight per cent of pedestrians used the flags.

Council voted down that recommendation, and after two hours of debate, voted 10-7 in favour of a motion from Coun. Shawn Cleary to halt the approval and installation of any new crosswalk flags pending a staff report piloting "various treatments to enhance the visibility and safety" of crosswalks using "high-quality data." That report is due back by the end of December 2017.

The consensus among most councillors was that the sidewalk flags aren't perfect, but they're effective, at least anecdotally.

"There's gaps in it, I agree," Coun. Tony Mancini said. "However, why would we remove flags or even consider removing flags, until we have a replacement for that technique or that tool?"

Coun. Richard Zurawski suggested the flags could actually be harmful, by making pedestrians feel safer than they are, or by making people take longer to cross the street.

He pushed his fellow councillors to let staff collect more information about their efficacy before acting.

"We should never do something because the gut feeling is that it's going to be better. Often data contradicts us," he said.

Coun. Lisa Blackburn argued that while she's in favour of evidence-based decision-making, she doesn't think data can capture all the ways the flags are effective.

When I see that bright orange out of the corner of my eye, I take extra caution, and I don't know how that could be measured.

Witness insists he saw bloody man in Sandeson's apartment

William Sandeson's lawyer is challenging the memory of a neighbour and friend who says he saw a bloody man in the medical student's apartment.

Pookiel McCabe said Tuesday he had two brief occasions to see the man, sitting motionless on a chair with blood on his back, as well as cash and a lot of blood on the floor.

Sandeson, 24, is on trial in Nova Scotia Supreme Court for the murder of 22-year-old physics student Taylor Samson. The jury has heard previously Samson had gone to the apartment to sell Sandeson 20 pounds of marijuana.

Defence attorney Eugene Tan showed McCabe and the jury police photos and surveillance video of the moments McCabe was in Sandeson's Halifax apartment on Aug. 15, 2015.

Tan suggested McCabe only

McNeil needs to step up on domestic violence: Advocate

Haley Ryan Metro Halifax

One professor says Premier Stephen McNeil's continued defence of a campaign staffer convicted of domestic assault who resigned this week shows he's "unwilling" to have difficult conversations around partner violence.

In the second full week of the provincial election campaign, two scandals have hit Premier McNeil as communications aide Kyley Harris resigned Tuesday, a day after the Liberals dropped candidate Matthew MacKnight in Pictou East over his 2013 derogatory comments found on social media.

Dr. Ardath Whynacht, sociology professor at Mount Allison University, said both the wording of Harris' resignation letter that he could be "punished" for the 2014 incident but didn't want the party "to bear that burden any longer," and McNeil's comment that Harris felt "under attack," show they're not taking the public's concerns seriously.

"The kind of casual misogyny ... that's being promoted here is Premier McNeil is basically asking Nova Scotians to cut (Harris) a break," Whynacht said Tuesday.

"For (McNeil) to frame him as a martyr and a victim of some sort of public mob, when really we're living in a province where services for victims of family violence are drastically lacking, that seems absurd to me. '

Whynacht said domestic violence is always complex and while Harris is "no monster," the responsible thing would've been to have Harris and McNeil directly address the issue that affects so many families - while not framing it as a "mistake."

But the move to drop Mac-Knight over social media comments, while continuing to defend Harris, makes it look like the Liberals don't take domestic violence seriously, Whynacht said.

If McNeil wanted to truly support victims of family violence, Whynacht said he could have taken the opportunity to outline the counselling programs for victims and offenders, as well as the Liberal's plans on how to improve them if re-elected. Making the issue even more relevant for the Liberals is their colleague Minister Lena Diab, whose husband was charged with assaulting her on New Year's Eve, Whynacht said.

Looking ahead to election day, Whynacht said there's still time for McNeil to step up but Nova Scotians have to decide whether they want a government willing to have "difficult public conversations."

Burrill pledges to create a high-income tax bracket

Nova Scotia's wealthiest residents could face a tax hike if the provincial NDP win the May 30 election.

Leader Gary Burrill says he would raise taxes on people earning more than $250,000

He says about 3,700 people, which he called a "fraction of the 1 per cent," would be affected.

The new high-income bracket would tax income over $250,000 at a rate of 24 per cent, up from a 21 per cent rate for anyone earning above $150,000.

The increase would push the combined tax rate to 57 per cent, the highest in Canada.

Girls felt pressured to send photos, court told

A Nova Scotia court has been told that more than 20 girls, some as young as 13, felt pressured to send intimate photos to boys and were unaware they were being shared.

Six boys were charged in July 2016 in Bridgewater.

An agreed statement of facts submitted in Bridgewater provincial court Tuesday says one 13-year-old girl was repeatedly asked for sexual photos over several days and felt pressured to send them, as she felt a rumour would be spread about her if she did not.

The document says two Dropbox accounts were created for the purpose of sharing intimate images of girls aged between 13 and 17 in various states of undress, including bare breasts and fully nude.

The document says most photos were sent through Snapchat — in which images disappear after 10 seconds but the boys circumvented the time limit by using other phones to take a photo of the photo. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Quebecers find silver lining in the flood

A soldier sits on a boat in Gatineau, Que., on Tuesday. CHRIS WATTIE/THE CANADIAN PRESS

As Liz Smart sat in a canoe outside her Montreal-area home, surrounded by several feet of water, she joked about having to make sure her husband's ashes were kept on high ground.

"I know it's morbid but it's the truth," she mused in an interview Tuesday. "He built this house 10 years ago — in three months. He was a master plumber. I was like, 'Out of all the times I need you here!' He could have come in handy."

It took only a few hours Sunday morning for the water in Smart's basement in Deux-Montagnes to reach just below the first floor. Nonetheless, she was in relatively good spirits being transported around the neighbourhood by her friend James Taylor in his rented canoe.

"When my husband died (a year ago) I was very alone; it was a very lonely time," Smart said. "This is a collective. People are smiling. They are putting things into perspective — your wealth is your health." Not far away, the water was acting like a moat around Sylvie Briere's flooded stone house but that didn't prevent her from emphasizing the positive.

"The solidarity is incredible," she said. "We have discovered our neighbours."

Briere said she and her neighbours spent Saturday night together building a wall of sand with the help of concrete blocks that were transported to the end of her street by another resident. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Comey ousted amid probe into Russia's election meddling

U.S. President Donald Trump abruptly fired FBI Director James Comey Tuesday, ousting the nation's top law enforcement official in the midst of an investigation into whether Trump's campaign had ties to Russia's election meddling.

In a letter to Comey, Trump said the firing was necessary to restore "public trust and confidence" in the FBI. Comey has come under intense scrutiny in recent months for his role in an investigation into Democrat Hillary Clinton's email practices, including a pair of letters he sent to Congress on the matter in the closing days of last year's election.

Trump made no mention of Comey's role in the Clinton investigation. But the president did assert that Comey informed him "on three separate occasions that I am not under investigation."

Tuesday's stunning announcement came shortly after the FBI corrected a sentence in Comey's sworn testimony on Capitol Hill last week. Comey told lawmakers that Huma Abedin, a top aide to Hillary Clinton, had sent "hundreds and thousands" of emails to her husband's laptop, including some with classified information.

On Tuesday, the FBI said in a two-page letter to the Senate Judiciary Committee that only "a small number" of the thousands of emails found on the laptop had been forwarded there while most had simply been backed up from electronic devices. Most of the email chains on the laptop containing classified information were not the result of forwarding, the FBI said.

Comey, 56, was nominated by President Barack Obama for the FBI post in 2013 to a 10-year term. Praised for his independence and integrity, Comey has spent three decades in law enforcement and has been no stranger to controversy.

Before the past months' controversies, Comey was perhaps best known for a remarkable 2004 standoff with top officials in the George W. Bush administration over a federal domestic surveillance program.

JESSICA ALLEN ON SUPERHERO BRANDING

Here are five Wonder Woman partnerships worth considering

Warner Bros. has joined forces with a nutrition bar called thinkThin to promote its upcoming Wonder Woman film. I know what you're thinking: Sure, the studio has had marketing tie-ins with other superheroes on the payroll — Batman got chocolate strawberry cereal - but aligning the greatest heroine with an absurdly named diet snack is outrageous and sexist. Not for me. This is the #thinspiration I need for bathing suit season. I say this is a chance for brands to make some money while simultaneously empowering women to lose weight and also aid them in just being better at being women.

Invisible airline seats

Delta and United have recently received a lot of flak for overselling their seats. Even though every airline does it, here's their chance for redemption: market "invisible seats," like the kind you'd find on Wonder Woman's invisible jet. These seats exist only in your imagination. Instead of passengers being dragged off a flight or threatened with having their children taken away by social services, flight attendants can just point to their boarding pass and say, "You're a superhero, too."

Saviour soles

Wonder Woman is an Amazon. The ancient Greeks used to depict Amazon battles on everything from pottery to architectural friezes, like the one on the Temple of Athena Nike on the Athenian Acropolis. Nike, are you listening? I'm thinking kneehigh, shock-resistant sneakers that absorb the emotional pain of the gender pay gap.

Waxing kit

Those are extremely short star-spangled shorts, Wonder Woman, Three words: "bikini waxing kit." One with no soothing after-lotions because no pain, no gain, as no woman has ever said after a wax but with Wonder Woman pictured on the box I bet it will sting less.

Wonderbread

This one is almost too easy because "Wonder" is literally in their name already: Wonder Bread. All they have to do is introduce a gluten-free loaf because last time I checked, superheroes, especially the handful of female ones, don't eat carbs.

Crystals

Superman's nemesis is the mineral Kryptonite. I say Wonder Woman should have a mineral no, make that a crystal — but it makes her stronger and wards off negative energy because women and Spencer Pratt love crystals. Wear Wonder Woman's rose quartz, or maybe citrine, around your neck for health, wellness, and a clear head. Because you can't fight the patriarchy if you're thinking about what the hell you should cook for dinner. Don't forget to breathe.

Diversity opportunity in public newspaper funds

If our institutions won't take diversity seriously, then it's fitting they be forced to if Ottawa gives them money.

Last week, the federal government issued an ultimatum to universities participating in the Canada Research Chairs program. Within the next three years, schools must meet diversity targets or face funding cuts.

Currently, universities underperform in awarding chairs to four designated groups: women, people with disabilities, Indigenous people and visible minorities.

Schools have made some progress. 2017 data shows universities met targets of 15 per cent and one per cent for visible minorities and Indigenous people, respectively.

But, as federal Science Minister Kirsty Duncan told the Globe and Mail: "It's been a decade, and there simply hasn't been enough progress."

Thus, the ultimatum. It should work that way with newspapers too. Some publishers are asking the Canadian government to assist the industry with its struggles and others are suggesting Ottawa step up its print advertising budget.

This is an opportunity. The carrot-and-stick approach might work for more than one industry lacking diversity. Canada's print media could stand to feel some pressure.

If the federal government opts to assist the press, there should be strings attached on diversity.

It's a truism that Canadian media is mostly white. But it's only axiomatic because the data is non-existent: the majority of print publications do not publish diversity data.

Unlike print media, the nation's broadcasters are bound by the Employment Equity Act. With varying degrees of transparency and consistency, they report their diversity efforts.

Print media has been hesitant to tackle diversity despite there being ample evidence of its benefits. It would not infringe the free speech of the press to join the rest of the nation's media in both making a profit and reflecting the nation it serves.

There are countless studies showing the value of diversity. A 2015 study from McKinsey, a global consulting firm, found gender-diverse companies are 15 per cent more likely to financially outperform their competitors. For ethnically diverse companies it's 35 per cent. There is a clear return on investment.

For the most part, it seems universities are welcoming Ottawa's demands. Selfregulation has only gotten them so far, and it's not far

The academy and the press are valuable members of our society and democracy. While universities have made steps towards diversity, they can't do it alone.

The same is true for print

Malts for mom: Time to close Whisky Gap

For whisky companies, Father's Day is Second Christmas. Sales teams position their fancy single malt or smooth blend as the must-have gift for dad. Meanwhile, mom gets a DustBuster. That's just not fair. It's time to close the Whisky Gap. Here are four reasons why whisky is better than a vacuum for Mother's Day gifting. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Every palate can be trained

Men and women have, essentially, the same physiological taste mechanisms. Most taste scientists agree that experience matters more than biology: if you can teach yourself to like bitter greens, you can learn to like just about anything.

Few Spirits all feature different images from the 1893 Chicago World's Fair.

Hold the girly drinks nonsense

Although the spirits and cocktail world is often divided into girly drinks and manly ones, there's no earthly reason for it. Men can metabolize more alcohol than women, not different types. There's no more alcohol in brown spirits than there is in vodka or gin. And a five-ounce glass of Pinot Grigio contains the same amount of alcohol as a one-ounce pour of liquor.

Gooderham & Worts is a tribute to the whisky once made at Toronto's legendary distillery, which was once the largest in the world.

Moms already spend on malts

Sales statistics suggest that more than a third of whisky consumers are women, maybe even two-fifths. So, there's a pretty decent chance that mom is already a part of the whisky-drinking demographic but has to buy her own, while dad gets bottles for free. That's just like being charged more for dry cleaning or haircuts.

Toki, from Japan's House of Suntory, is delicious goodness.

Subverting the lazy sales pitches

Whisky for men and vodka martinis for women is totally arbitrary, like the way books at the airport are divided into shelves with pink covers decorated with cakes and shoes versus all the serious, hardcover black-and-gold business books. Whenever we have a chance to subvert that kind of nonsense, we should.

The Dalmore 12 is sweet deliciousness.

Winnie the Peg

The willy nilly silly old bear was actually named for Winnipeg

Sean Plummer

A.A. Milne may have been English, but his creation, Winnie the Pooh, has roots in Canada.

Milne based the honey-loving bear on his son Christopher Robin's stuffed teddy, which the boy named Winnie after seeing a female black bear with that name at the London Zoo.

The zoo's Winnie was on loan from Captain Harry Colebourne, a member of the 2nd Canadian Infantry Brigade. Colebourne had bought the bear as a cub during his brigade's stop in White River, Ontario, for $20 from a hunter who had killed her mother (the Brigade was on its way from Winnipeg to fight in World War I). He named her Winnipeg, after Colebourne's hometown. Winnie, for short, subsequently became the brigade's mascot, and they took her to England with them.

Milne's first Pooh story, Winnie-the-Pooh, was published in 1926. Winnipeg the bear lived at London Zoo until her death in 1934.

The restored toys that inspired Winnie-the-Pooh's characters are displayed at the main branch of the New York Public Library. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Smaller than a RAV4, Toyota's new CUV looks like a Scion

Dan Ilika AutoGuide.com

It's hard to believe, considering the automaker practically pioneered the segment, that Toyota waited this long to introduce something smaller than its RAV4. More surprising still, the 2018 Toyota C-HR wasn't even planned as a Toyota and was supposed to hit the North American market bearing a Scion badge. However, that brand's demise opened the door to a tiny Toyota ready to take on the likes of the Nissan Juke and Honda HR-V.

That the C-HR was initially intended to be Scion's first crossover is useful in explaining its looks, which are polarizing to say the least. The C-HR's slight exterior proportions don't, however, result in a cramped cabin. The vast majority of space has been dedicated to the passenger area. However, the C-HR comes up short in the cargo compartment, with only 538 litres of space with the rear seats upright.

Underpinning the C-HR is a variation of the architecture that is shared by the likes of the current Prius and the upcoming redesigned Camry. With plenty of torsional rigidity and a low center of gravity, the C-HR features a taut chassis that is atypical of a crossover. Add in wheels that sit about as close to the corners as possible and actual steering feel and feedback, and the C-HR is a nimble package.

Adding to the enjoyment is the suspension setup. The subcompact crossover does well to absorb bumps and road imperfections. Dampers at all four corners reduce rebound rates.

Considering how engaging and enjoyable the C-HR can be on a twisty road, the engine propelling the C-HR is an underwhelming one. Given the way the C-HR tackles turns a torquey turbo engine would enhance the crossover's otherwise impressive performance. Also somewhat disappointing is the crossover's official fuel economy ratings.

With only two trims available - XLE and XLE Premium - the subcompact crossover starts at $24,690 and comes with a great suite of standard safety features, including adaptive cruise control and autonomous emergency braking. Also along for the ride is a dual-zone automatic climate control system and backup camera, and a standard seven-inch touchscreen infotainment system. Smartphone interfacing systems Apple CarPlay and Android Auto aren't included just yet. The infotainment system also lacks satellite radio, though Bluetooth audio streaming is built in. The Premium trim brings the price to $26,290, and adds a few features, including 18-inch alloy wheels, blind spot monitoring and Smart Key with pushbutton start, to round out the Scion-esque trim walk.

Add it all up and the C-HR looks like a solid entry in a field that will become increasingly crowded in the coming years.

EXPLAINED

All crossovers are SUVs, but not all SUVs are crossovers

Sami Haj-Assaad AutoGuide.com

What exactly is a crossover, Crossover Utility Vehicle or CUV? It may seem like a silly question, but it's one we get a lot. Crossovers have evolved from Crossovers have evolved from old-school sport utility vehicles. It's about platforms — SUVs typically use a body-on-frame platform, most common in pickup trucks, while crossovers use a unibody that's shared with cars.

Automakers have been using body-on-frame construction for a long time by using a chassis that typically contains the drivetrain, and then mounting the body on top of that. But body-on-frame vehicles are heavy and anyone who's driven a truck can attest to their limited handling capabilities. Furthermore, that added weight means SUVs aren't very fuel efficient.

As a result, automakers have started making SUV-like vehicles with car platforms and engines, which are more fuel friendly and easier to handle. It's a practical design that combines the advantages of sedans or hatchbacks as well as the size and some capabilities of the SUV. These are frequently called crossovers.

But a new harmonization strategy means that defining a crossover by its platform isn't necessarily accurate. Automakers have developed lightweight, modular architectures that are being used for a wide variety of vehicle types from compact hatchbacks to sedans to crossovers. The term SUV has grown colloquially to encompass all larger high-riding vehicles including crossovers, because there aren't many body-on-frame SUVs left. Naming basically comes down to marketing.

The 2017 Honda CR-V is based on the same unibody platform as the Civic. HANDOUT

Crosby left in because spotter couldn't pull him, NHL says

A week after he was knocked out of a playoff game with a concussion, Pittsburgh star Sidney Crosby tripped headfirst into the boards during another tense game against the Washington Capitals. He did not come out of Game 6 on Monday night.

Deputy commissioner Bill Daly told The Associated Press in an email Tuesday that the league's centralized concussion spotter decided the play did not meet concussion protocol criteria that require mandatory removal from play. The protocol states a player must be removed if a spotter sees symptoms in a player who takes a blow to his head or upper torso from that, the first thing another player's shoulder, his head hitting the ice or from a punch to the head.

Crosby slid into the boards exactly one week after he was knocked out of Game 3 by a blow the head from the Capitals' Matt Niskanen. He missed Game 4 with a concussion and returned for Game 5 on Saturday.

On Tuesday after practice, Crosby said he was checked by a doctor Monday night but did not go into concussion protocol.

"Any guy that goes into the boards like that, the first thing is the trainer and the doctors, that's how it goes." Crosby said.

"What you're talking about is the difference between checking with a doctor and entering concussion protocol, they're two separate things."

Penguins coach Mike Sullivan said after the 5-2 loss and again Tuesday that Crosby was not in the protocol.

"If they go through the protocol then I usually get notified by our medical staff, that's the process," Sullivan said. "That's completely out of our control."

The league added centralized spotters this season who have the authority to remove players if they see symptoms of a concussion, like the NFL.

During the regular season, Edmonton Oilers centre Connor McDavid expressed his displeasure for being pulled from a game by a spotter after his chin hit the ice, and goaltenders Mike Smith and Henrik Lundqvist criticized the system they consider flawed. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Juventus quickly back into European final

Dani Alves inspired Juventus to a 2-1 win over Monaco on Tuesday to send the Italian club to its second Champions League final in three years.

Alves set up Mario Mandzukic's opener in the 33rd minute and got on the scoresheet himself on the stroke of halftime with a fantastic volley as Juventus swept to a 4-1 victory on aggregate.

It was a fantastic performance from the 34-year-old wing back, who many described as being past his best when he joined from Barcelona on a free transfer in the offseason.

Kylian Mbappe scored a consolation goal in the 69th minute for Monaco, as Juventus remained on course for the treble.

North America's request for an accelerated awarding of the 2026 World Cup without facing a challenge is on hold, for a few months at least.

Ryan Hanigan hit a two-out, bases-clearing single as part of a six-run third inning, Mark Reynolds homered for a fourth straight game and the Colorado Rockies beat the Chicago Cubs 10-4 on Tuesday.

Reynolds also added two RBI singles as every player in the starting lineup, including pitcher Antonio Senzatela, had a hit for the NL Westleading Rockies. Reynolds is batting .533 through four games on this 10-game homestand. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
